Dealing with Difference

Christian Patterns of Response to Religious Rivalry in Late Antiquity and Beyond
Edited by Geoffrey D. Dunn and Christine Shepardson

Published in English.

Religious rivalry exists where groups of people distinguish themselves from others on the basis of differing beliefs and practices touching identity and life’s meaning. These differences were addressed in a variety of ways, depending on levels of tolerance: ranging from violence, which captures most attention, through polemic and debate to compromise and negotiation. While all sought to resolve rivalry, the means chosen could involve either an escalation or de-escalation of the conflict. In the early centuries of its existence, Christianity reacted both to internal differences between members and to external differences with non-Christians. In fresh case studies, the essays in this volume examine not only patterns of escalation of rivalry but also emphasise strategies adopted that sought to de-escalate tensions.

Survey of contents

Geoffrey D. Dunn/Christine Shepardson: Introduction

Part One: Strategies of De-escalation

Part Two: Strategies of Escalation

Geoffrey D. Dunn
Born 1962; 2000 PhD, Australia Catholic University; Fellow of the Australian Humanities Academy; since 2014 Honorary Research Associate, University of Pretoria.
https://orcid.org/0000-0001-5880-1351

Christine Shepardson
Born 1972; 2003 PhD, Duke University; currently Lindsay Young Professor and Head of the Department of Religious Studies at the University of Tennessee.

Order now:
order@mohrsiebeck.com
Phone: +49 (0)7071-923-17
Fax: +49 (0)7071-51104