Der Protestantismus als Forum und Faktor

Sozialethische Netzwerke im Protestantismus der frühen Bundesrepublik

[Protestantism as Forum and Factor. Socio-Ethical Networks in the Protestantism of the Early Federal Republic of Germany.]

Published in German.

The re-orientation of German society in the foundation phase of the Federal Republic was shaped by numerous protestant initiatives. The establishment of the German Protestant Church Conference, the idea of a protestant academy, publications such as »Christ und Welt« and the »Sonntagsblatt« as well as study facilities and lexicon projects specified the character of Protestantism in the republic's early days. Sabrina Hoppe's analysis of this socially-orientated Protestantism's networks sheds light on its aspirations and self-image, and describes its role in debates about the socio-ethical transformation processes taking place. Starting with Eberhard Müller and Friedrich Karrenberg's positions in these networks, she devotes herself to Protestantism's perception of itself in its dual function as mediation forum and opinion-forming factor.
