Die verbotene Wirklichkeit

Untersuchungen zur wirklichkeitskonstitutiven Relevanz des christlichen Offenbarungsbegriffs

[The Forbidden Reality. Studies on the Reality-Constitutive Relevance of the Christian Concept of Revelation.]

Published in German.

Post-modern occidental Christianity seems to be inexorably losing its power of persuasion. Now that the binding nature of the Christian message can no longer be supported by biologicistic, historical, moral, and speculative-metaphysical arguments, the very foundations of the Christian faith, God and his revelation are being shaken by the suspicion that fabrication is afoot. What remains of faith when it emerges that even God himself and his revelation are human constructs? Katarína Kristinová poses this question and shows how the fundaments of the Christian faith can be tapped into anew and its relevance recaptured through a radical constructivist way of reading.
