Biblische Variationen im antiken Judentum

[Jewish Revolving Stages. Biblical Variations in Ancient Judaism.]

Published in German.

jewish authors in antiquity reinterpreted biblical texts, creating a revolving stage of characters and settings. The Torah was the model for diverse interpretations of the authors' worldviews. René Bloch discusses four examples of this creative rewriting: the Jewish-Hellenistic love story of Joseph and Aseneth, the biography of Moses written by Philo of Alexandria, the Book of Biblical Antiquities by Pseudo-Philo and, from a later period, the Josippon from 10th century Italy. All of these four texts deal with biblical figures, reinterpreting and continuing their narratives. And all four works reflect a complex relationship to the non-Jewish environment, representing an authentic and confident Judaism on the one hand and all of them trying hard to connect to mainstream society on the other.

René Bloch Geboren 1969; 1999 Promotion in Lateinischer Philologie (Universität Basel); 2008 Habilitation in Judaistik und Klassischer Philologie (Universität Basel); seit 2008 Professor für Judaistik an der Universität Bern.
