Künftige Forderungen

[Future Receivables.]

Published in German.

A »future receivable« signifies a person's expectation of becoming entitled to claim something from someone else in the future. As such it may be secured by mortgages or serve as security itself and therefore already has legal force in the present. This existence between the present and the future, between the law of obligations and property law as well as between substantive and procedural law is a good reason to study it from various perspectives of private law.
