

Staatskirchenrecht oder Religionsverfassungsrecht?

Ein begriffspolitischer Grundsatzstreit

Hrsg. v. Hans Michael Heinig u. Christian Walter

[The State-Church Law or Religious Constitutional Law in Germany? A Debate on Fundamental Political Concepts.]

Published in German.

Cultural diversification is a feature of modern societies. The terms 'state-church law' and 'religious constitutional law' are presently at the center of a lively discussion on how public law should react to the challenges they present for the subject of 'religion'. Whereas the 'state-church law' is mainly geared to the institutional relationship between the state and organized religious communities, the 'religious constitutional law' tries to protect the communal aspects of religion through the basic right to freedom of religion. By dealing with the concrete issues (for example corporative religious freedom, corporation status, Islam), this volume documents the controversy between advocates of both concepts.

Christian Walter ist Professor für Völkerrecht und Öffentliches Recht an der Universität München.

Hans Michael Heinig Geboren 1971; Professor für Öffentliches Recht, insb. Kirchen- und Staatskirchenrecht an der Juristischen Fakultät der Georg-August-Universität Göttingen und Leiter des Kirchenrechtlichen Instituts der EKD.
