

Freiburger Rechtswissenschaftliche Abhandlungen

Edited by the Rechtswissenschaftliche Fakultät der Albert-Ludwigs-Universität Freiburg

The Freiburg Jurisprudential Studies continue the tradition of a faculty establishing its own series for outstanding dissertations, habilitations and conference volumes from all areas of jurisprudence. In an era of increasing specialization, the selection of high-quality writings published by authors of this faculty in the new series gives an impression of the research carried out at one of the renowned German faculties of law and at the same time provides a contribution to an interdisciplinary discourse.

What is the substantive basis underlying the German Civil Code's procedure for unwinding contracts or performance without a legal ground? Philipp Schlüter casts new light on the classic dispute about unification and separation theory as encountered in the law of unjustified enrichment. In so doing, he also makes a number of findings regarding neuralgic »triangular cases« as well as the »Saldotheorie« problem.

This volume contains contributions to a symposium of scholars from the Nagoya Law School and the Faculty of Law of the Albert-Ludwigs-Universität Freiburg on the topic »Reactive Instruments of Social Governance«. Together with volume 20 of the Freiburger Rechtswissenschaftliche Abhandlungen it completes the documentation of the results of a joint research project funded by the Nagoya Institute of Advanced Research (IAR) and the Freiburg Institute for Advanced Studies (FRIAS). With the social governance by law and the interplay between substantive legal standards and procedural enforcement the symposium addressed a topic of both outstanding academic and practical importance. In the pursuit of certain political or social goals a legal system is basically faced with two options: the exertion of influence on the behaviour of its citizens by means of preventive or reactive instruments. The relationship of preventive and reactive regulatory instruments is a key element for the analysis and understanding of a legal system.

Crimes affect the sense of justice and social interactivity. Matthias Müller makes these impairments visible on the basis of empirical research in just-world theory and shows in his criminal-theoretical considerations what the function of retributive punishment is in the maintenance of a liberal order. The interdisciplinary approach opens up a new perspective on retributive justice.

Criminal breach of trust is both one of the most important and most controversial offences in German white collar law. A direct comparison to fraud cases in US property law, especially those involving mail/wire fraud and misapplication, reveals what seem to be reasonable results, whereas Germany still has a long way to go along its chosen »special« path.

This volume contains contributions to a symposium of scholars from the Nagoya Law School and the Faculty of Law of the Albert-Ludwigs-Universität Freiburg on the topic »Preventive Instruments of Social Governance«. With the social governance by law and the interplay between substantive legal standards and procedural enforcement the Symposium addressed a topic of both outstanding academic and practical importance. The legal framework is an essential instrument in modern rule-of-law societies for defining standards of societal life. Of course, ways of governance by law may vary between legal systems and cultures, but in the analysis of legal governance instruments, the interplay between substantive standards and their procedural enforcement is always of central importance. In the pursuit of certain political or social goals, a legal system is basically faced with two options: the exertion of influence on the behaviour of its citizens either by means of preventive or of reactive instruments. The relationship of these two regulatory tools is a key element for the analysis and understanding of a legal system.

Technical innovations and developments in modern society naturally affect how law and legislation are shaped. The contributions by Japanese and German experts contained in this volume show that the law is by no means paralysed by tradition, but rather frequently opens itself to innovation, without automatically completely conceding traditional conceptions of justice.

Law, in order to be law, relies on being justiciable and enforceable. Insofar, it is procedure that makes the law. Nonetheless, procedure and remedies lead lives in the shadows, being often discarded as »mere technicalities«, strictly depending on what parties to a controversy »actually« owe one another. The present work takes on a different perspective in the context of German administrative law – with quite surprising results.

The European Stability Mechanism (ESM) is one of the key measures for overcoming the so-called Eurozone crisis and raises fundamental issues for European and constitutional law. Lena Ketterer places the development of the mechanism in the context of the European Union's bailout policy of the years 2010 to 2014 and analyzes the necessary change to the European treaties as well as the international ESM treaty with regard to the legal reservations of the »Europe article« written into the Basic Law for the Federal Republic of Germany (Art. 23 Para. 1 GG). Did the change to the European Union treaties and the international ESM treaty require a constitution-changing approval act with a two-thirds majority in both houses of the German parliament? In her discussion of this issue, Ketterer redefines the scope of the Europe article.

In distinguishing among three forms of justification in situations of necessity (necessity stricto sensu, defensive necessity and self-defense), criminal law in Germany aims at reaching a high level of precision in the theory of justification. However the concept of defensive necessity has been dealt with in a rather unsystematic and fragmented form. Javier Wilenmann establishes the philosophical foundations, systematic position and legal prerequisites of this central institution of criminal law in Germany.

Sentencing law has been neglected by legal science for a long time, although it is of great importance for legal practice. This volume deals with basic issues of sentencing. It is based on the lectures given at an international symposium on sentencing law and the reality of punishment in Kyoto in September 2009. The articles show that there are common ideas of justice as well as differences due to legal culture.

Bader, Mathis

Organmangel und Organverteilung

Each year, approximately 1,000 patients die in Germany although they could have been saved by an organ transplantation. In view of these dramatic figures, Mathis Bader studies the two most pressing questions from the perspective of constitutional law and legal policy: the lack of organs and the allocation of organs. The author begins by examining the strategies used to deal with the lack of organs and then advocates a change in the current German regulation pertaining to the removal of organs, which stipulates the prior consent by the donor or consent by the relatives, to the opt-out solution, which means consent by default if not declared otherwise. After giving a comprehensive, critical description of the German organ allocation system from an historical, medical and legal perspective as well as depicting its basis in constitutional law, he explores applicable and feasible allocation criteria, and in doing so includes international discussions of medical ethics.

Reinhold, Joachim

Unrechtszurechnung und der Abbruch rettender Verläufe

The concept of imputation has always been a key term in the dogmatics of criminal law, and forms the basis for Joachim Reinhold's study of the structures of offences in legal theory, in which he expresses his criticism of existing theories and models, and presents his own point of view. In doing so, he provides a framework for his theoretical outline by analyzing various types of cases in which the characteristic feature is the prevention of chances for rescue. This results in a comprehensive reflection on causality, obligation, participation and omission as fundamental concepts of criminal law. Thus the author provides the means required to comprehend the existing strategies for solving the problems dealt with in the context of the prevention of chances for rescue and to develop solutions as well.

Does traditional administrative procedural law meet the requirements of the information society? In dealing with some communicative procedural acts, such as for example the right to a fair hearing, Barbara Bredemeier focuses on the current discussion. A detailed and practical analysis of German procedural law, including the theory of the consequences of errors, is followed by an examination of the guidelines set down in constitutional law. The author investigates whether or not statutory law in fact does adhere to these guidelines, and also determines that there is a need for change. She does a comparative study of the various European administrative laws, and as a result of this shows which changes have to be made. In conclusion, she makes proposals for amendments to the Law of Administrative Proceedings and the Rules of the Administrative Courts.

Purpose thinking is something administrative law has been familiar with all times. Katharina Schober therefore begins her examination by studying the historical development of the application of purposes in administrative law. In doing so, she shows that a purpose orientation in the law is unavoidable, yet problematical because of the vagueness of purposes which eases the judicial attachment of administration and judicature. Due to the increasing finalization of administrative law, the problem of the vagueness of purposes is more urgent today than it used to be. Lawmakers are increasingly trying to solve this problem by using guidelines, with which they can make the purpose for which they are striving more concrete. Katharina Schober examines the extent to which this approach to a solution has been successful in a comprehensive empirical analysis of the way in which 22 guidelines in environmental law are dealt with in legislation, judicial decisions and literature.

Focusing on scholarly and historical aspects, Alexander Hollerbach provides the essential elements of a history of the faculty of law in Freiburg since the university was founded in 1457. The various articles focus on the 19th and 20th century, and in particular on individual legal subjects such as the philosophy of law, canon law and public law as well as the development during the Nazi period. In addition to cross-sections from general history and the history of specific subjects, a substantial part of the book consists of biographical studies of eminent scholars who were in Freiburg. This work also contains an extensive bibliography on the history of the faculty of law in Freiburg.
